Waves of Becoming

Taruna Singh & Karen Kluwicz

MARCH 15th to APRIL 30th, 2026

Waves of Becoming pairs the elemental with the human. Taruna Singh explores the timeless forces of earth, water, fire, air, and space, while Karen Kluwicz examines identity, resilience, and healing through expressive figurative abstraction. Together, their work reflects the shared rhythms of nature and human transformation.

Waves of Becoming

This collection engages with the theme Waves of Becoming by exploring the development of human interactions and the inner strength individuals draw upon within them. Through painting and mixed-media work, I examine identity and human experience, presenting concepts that invite reflection and dialogue.

Through semi-abstract, body-positive imagery and a focus on movement and emotion, I work with body-positive imagery, using skin tones that neutralize bias and stereotyping. Figures and abstraction remain central to communicating my concept-driven work. By stripping away preconceived notions of identity or culture, I seek to reveal the essence of being — demonstrating strength, interpersonal challenges, possibilities, and outcomes. Skin colour, body shape, sexuality, and the environments surrounding the figures are intentionally rendered to remain accessible and inclusive.

The act of painting itself guides the level of abstraction needed to express each concept. The work is direct and raw, intended to incite dialogue and foster meaningful communication.

Together, the works in this exhibition trace the waves we move through in the process of becoming — from spirituality and self-reflection to the exploration and evolution of our interactions with others.

Bio

Karen Klucowicz is a Canadian expressive abstract artist whose bold, concept-driven work explores themes of resilience, autonomy, and healing. Her paintings reflect the inner strength of individuals navigating the cycles that relationships often present.

Rooted in her lived experience, Karen's work fosters dialogue by challenging silence and creating space for connection and shared understanding. Her art communicates through a powerful visual language that invites viewers to see themselves — and each other — with empathy and clarity.

Her creative career spans from Interior Designer, Marketing, and Graphic Design through to her studio practice in fine art today. She exhibits regularly and her work is held in private collections internationally.
