Waves of Becoming

Inspired by the elemental philosophy of Ayurveda, this collection reflects the timeless forces that shape our world: earth, water, fire, air and space. These elements, central to balance and well-being, form the quiet architecture of life.

Through abstract scapes, I explore these elemental energies as metaphors for harmony, change and the subtle rhythms that move through nature and within us. My paintings unfold through translucent acrylic washes, textured surfaces and intuitive gestural marks, building layers of depth and movement.

There is often a quiet sense of motion within the work, like tides shifting beneath the surface: a reflection of my own journey across places, cultures and identities. Each piece becomes a dialogue between structure and surrender, offering a space where movement slowly softens into stillness.

Bio

Taruna Singh is a Punjabi-Canadian mixed media artist based in Ontario. Her work reflects on memory, movement and transformation, shaped by the cultures and places she calls home. Originally trained in Art and Advertising Design at New York City College of Technology, Singh spent many years working as a graphic designer before returning to painting in 2020. While her design background informs her sense of composition, her current practice is guided more by intuition, texture and the emotional pull of materials.

Over the past five years, Singh has exhibited in more than twenty exhibitions across Canada, including a solo exhibition at Synonym Shop in Hamilton and participation in the Art Gallery of Hamilton Art Sale. Her work is held in public and private collections in Canada, India, the United States and Europe, including St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto.

Alongside her studio practice, she facilitates mixed-media and Gelli printing workshops with local arts organizations, sharing the joy and accessibility of art-making.
